“ sue Posted on cut the sgnirts so they won't be too long to trap the birds, and put it out for nesting supplies. Just think what fashionable nests the babies will grow up in.As far as the importance of length: I heard a sad tale of a bird that got tethered to a tree and eventually died, because a long string had gotten tangled to his foot. So cut them small, but in a crotch of a tree or some place the birdies frequent, and watch them recycle for you.##imported-begin##Josh##imported-end##
